Characteristics of Graduate Institute of Asian Humanities

Tiantai Archive Center (TAC)

The TAC has been established to promote and advance the academic study of Tiantai Buddhism; it contains seminal collections of ancient documents and textual sources, as well as modern studies on Tiantai in differing languages and from various areas.

A Forum of Lectures from Experts

The TAC hosts invited scholars and professors from different fields, contributing to the discussion about the interaction between Confucianism, Buddhism, and Daoism. It also aims at understanding ancient and modern contexts of culture and ideas, as well as values in contemporary humanistic thoughts; our courses and events have always achieved positive feedback.

Seminars for Students at the Graduate Institute of Asian Humanities (GIAH)

To intensify exchange and interaction between students preparing their master theses and PhD theses, the Graduate Institute of Asian Humanities (GIAH) organizes reading groups and colloquia related to the topic of their theses.

Introduction of the Graduate Institute of Asian Humanities (GIAH)

The GIAH emphasizes the interaction between the teaching staff and the students in both a liberal and engaged environment of intellectual exchange and mutual care. We give students a strong impetus to study the history of the traditional teachings of Confucianism, Buddhism, and Daoism, and to develop special expertise in these fields. Our concern is to make students combine their career ambitions with a strong sense to contribute to society. Adhering to the Buddhist pedagogical ideal of “inspiring others by one’s own inspiration” we welcome all students sharing our values and contributing to Huafan’s significance in modern society.
